

BOY INVENTS RADIO PHONE.

Heats Big Experts by Month in Mile Talk for Dime.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.—David N. Hedlund, a fourteen-year-old Worcester High School boy, has with crude apparatus perfected a system of wireless telephoning with which he converses with companions a mile distant. Radio conversations were held at least a month before the first practical demonstration of long distance wireless telephoning became public.

Hedlund began his experiments by investing a dime in the construction of home made apparatus. Wireless messages within a radius of 700 miles were received. During one of his experiments, David's voice was carried to the home of his next door neighbor, Oliver Granquet, another fourteen-year-old boy, who was experimenting at the same moment with his aerial outfit. This led to the development of Hedlund's wireless telephoning.

COLD HANDS AND FEET—POOR CIRCULATION.

EXERCISE TO STIMULATE CIRCULATION

When the hands and feet are continually cold and frequently get cramped and "asleep" when held in the same position for a time, you may be sure that you are the victim of poor circulation and weak nerves. Of all the common disorders which respond to exercise and deep breathing poor circulation stands first, and these are, in fact, the only real cures to pursue to permanently improve this condition.

Poor circulation in itself is not a dangerous ailment, but it leads to so many other complications, which are not so easily overcome, that it is better to follow a regular course of daily exercises to build up the weakened nerves and stimulate the action of the blood before any serious trouble arises.

The average person is very sensitive to draughts, when as a matter of fact if poor circulation were not in evidence and the body perfectly healthy they could not affect you.

A sluggish condition of the blood causes the slightest breath of fresh air to chill you, and it is therefore your natural desire to get up and close the window as soon as you feel chilled. If you will make it a practice to do something to stimulate and quicken the sluggish blood, such as a few minutes' deep breathing, by an open window and several movements of some vigorous exercise, you will feel a warm and healthy glow come over the body and the chilliness will disappear. Heavy massage is effective in improving poor circulation, and when practiced with a Turkish towel wrung out of cold water will be found to have the effect of a tonic and internal stimulant.

Hot water baths, followed by a cold shower, cause reaction and make the whole body glow with health and a pinkish hue, due to the improved circulation of the blood.

To-day's illustration shows a body-bending exercise, which, if practiced for several minutes, will stimulate the blood to action, overcome poor circulation, improve digestion, and also aid in reducing the large waist and high abdomen. Bend to first one side and then to the other at least ten times. After you are more practiced the muscles limbered up a bit you may take the exercise without bending at the knees.

Letters From Evening World Readers Following Miss Furlong's Lessons.

EATING APPLES.—MARY C. writes: "I have followed your lessons and have lost weight. I am very grateful to you. My legs and thighs are very large and I intend to walk four miles every day and try to reduce them. I am starting to take the rolling exercise and roll 100 times. Is this too many? Every night I eat two apples and drink a glass of water. Is this fattening?"

Do not overdo the rolling nor practice it too long if it makes you dizzy. Leg circling will reduce the thighs. Stationary running in the fresh air will also help reduce the hips. When you have run ten minutes it is the same as a two-mile walk. Apples are not fattening and are the very best thing you could eat on retiring. They stimulate the action of the liver, clear the complexion, overcome constipation and purify the inside of the mouth, causing you to awaken with a refreshed taste.

ROUND SHOULDERS.—MRS. T. R. writes: "I am round-shouldered, and do not seem to be able to overcome it. Will shoulder braces help me any, and what make do you recommend?"

Practice chest raising, from the wall, and when you are stronger do the same from the floor. Stand several feet from the wall, pressing the palms of the hands on it. Lower the chest until it touches the wall. Do not bend the knees nor move the feet. At first this exercise will make the shoulder blades stiff and sore, which only proves how much you really needed it. After a time it will positively hurt you to stand stoop shoulders. You do not need braces. Nothing but exercises will strengthen the muscles of the back and shoulders and compel you to stand erectly.

KINKY HAIR.—MABEL L. H. asks: "Can you give me a formula for kinky hair?"

Use the following mixture. It is very effective: Beef suet, 5 ounces; yellow wax, 1 ounce; castor oil, 1 ounce; benzoic acid, 5 grains; oil of cassia, 8 drops; oil of lemon, one-half gram. Melt suet and wax over lukewarm water. Add castor oil and acid and allow to cool. Then add other oils.

OILY DANDRUFF.—MRS. T. J. G. writes: "Just a line to thank you for the great help your articles in the paper have given me. I have gained five pounds, overcome constipation and irritation of long standing and look and feel so much better. Please advise me about oily dandruff. I wash my hair with liquid green soap every two weeks, brush and massage with warm water. Add castor oil and acid and allow to cool. Then add other oils.

Use talc soap and omit the brushing and massage, as the glands are enlarged and over-stimulated. Use a soft brush on the hair, to remove the day's accumulation of dust, but do not brush the scalp.

STARCHY FOODS.—MRS. ELLEN K. asks: "Will you mention some foods that do not contain starch? So often you mention to omit starchy foods, if trying to reduce."

Fruits, except bananas, all green vegetables, fish, gluten bread, vegetable and fruit salads, game, meat.

EGGS.—A man reader asks: "Do you consider eggs a good article of food, and are they fattening?"

Eggs are a most valuable and easily digested food and are at their best when taken raw. They are not fattening and may be eaten any way but fried or scrambled if you are trying to reduce.

KINK IN KNEES.—MRS. WILLIAM M. writes: "Why is it that when I bend over to touch the floor my knees bend and I get such a catch in them and have to discontinue the exercise? I do not have rheumatism or stiff joints."

This condition will disappear after you have limbered up a bit and mastered the exercises. Sometimes overdoing the exercises will cause the muscles to become stiff and sore for days.

GREENROOM CLUB RULES AND TRADITIONS UPSET BY A VENTURESOME EVE

The Green Room Club may get over it, but 'twill never be the same. The sanctity of that haven of congenial theatrical masculinity has been desecrated. No more may the timid bachelor know absolute safety from the wiles of wily woman within its confines, and no more may the wife of the convivial Green Room husband feel absolutely satisfied in her mind that Horatio, while at the club, will not be tempted by that greatest of all temptations—woman. Things have been all mused up at the Green Room Club. Edge up a little closer, friends, and get this! A woman—a real, honest-to-goodness woman—has entered the portals of the institution and broken the unwritten law which for years has said it shouldn't happen.

They gave Commodore J. Stuart Blackton of Vitagraph fame a "beef-steak" at the club last night. One hundred and fifty men sat around the festive board and assisted the war in making the packers rich by eating beef. When the scraps had been cleared away for to-day's hash and the speeches had all been made, they repaired to the theatre, on the second floor. Then it happened.

The programme said she was Selbe Feyrel, the sensation of the Hippodrome. When she appeared on the stage, however, she proved to be none other than Belle Storey, the lyric soprano with the well known so-called "some pipes."

Miss Storey sang three songs nicely, received a bunch of American Beauties and retired all smiles and triumph. It was fine, delicious—but the club's unwritten law had been fractured in various places. In fact, to use a new expression which all ambitious reporters should appropriate immediately, every bone in its body had been broken.

The entertainment furnished the guests as first aid to their digestion was very good. Two sets of motion pictures were shown. In one, entitled "Love, Luck and Gasoline," the honored guest of the evening appeared as a regular actor. Burton Daniels and Lester Conrad, loaned by the Palace Theatre, rendered selections on the piano and violin, assisted by considerable dexterity and long hair.

John A. Finnigan, tenor soloist at the Cathedral, sang very sweetly; Herbert Corthell did a monologue nineteen years old; Little Billy gave an exhibition of his idea of Richard Mansfield in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr.

Hyde!" Irvin Cobb told two stories of life in the Southern side-hill country, and there were other stunts, notably a sketch by Augustin March, entitled "The Unknown Quantity," which was made highly entertaining by Henry Hicks, Harman MacGregor and Rollo Lloyd, assisted by some bright lines and unique situations.
